CONTRIBUTORS

Kirkwood Adams is a Lecturer at Columbia University, where he teaches the first-year writing seminar. He is the co-translator of Johannes Heldén's Astroecology, a hybrid book of poetry and images. Together with Maria Baker, he researches GenAI's composition processes. Adams and Baker also co-teach the writing module of Columbia's interdisciplinary course, "AI in Context."

Austin Anderson is a Provostial Fellow at Stanford University and co-founder of the Stanford Critical Game Studies Lab. He studies how games are enmeshed with race, gender, class, and power while also examining the liberatory potentials of gameworlds. His first book project, Racial Recursivity: A Methodology for Critical Race Game Studies, creates a formalist ludic-textual framework for reading videogames as racial-cultural projects by exploring the role of repetition in racial practices and games. He has published in the fields of game studies, African American literary studies, and comic studies, and his work has appeared in Transformative Works and Culture, The Journal of Gaming & Virtual Worlds, Electronic Book Review, The Comparatist, Popular Culture Review, and other outlets.

Maria G. Baker is a consultant at Columbia University's Writing Center. Together with Kirkwood Adams, she researches GenAI's composition processes, and they co-teach the writing module of Columbia University's interdisciplinary course, "AI in Context." She is also an Adjunct Assistant Professor at Pratt Institute, where she teaches courses focusing on multimodal composition, creative writing, and creative thinking strategie

Rodolfo "Rudy" Barrett is an Associate Director of the Learning Centers at James Madison University and a Lecturer in their school of Writing, Rhetoric and Technical Communication. In those roles, he directly administrates a writing center and has taught first-year writing courses, as well as those on writing center theory and practice, research writing, and GenAI in composition. He is also a PhD student in Composition and Applied Linguistics at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, where his research focus is neurodiversity in the teaching and learning of writing.

Ashley M. Beardsley is an Assistant Professor of English & Communication and Director of the Writing & Multiliteracy Center at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth. Her research interests include food rhetorics, media studies, feminist rhetorics, and writing center studies. She also co-edits the Disputatio section for Kairos: A Journal of Rhetoric, Technology, and Pedagogy. Her work has recently appeared in Multimodal + Justice + Action, Peitho, and Center Moves: A Peer-Reviewed Archive of Tutor Training Materials.

Lisa Bell is Director of the UVU Writing Center and Graduate Writing Center. Her research interests and scholarship focus on writing center studies, including technology and tutoring, support for multilingual writers, program administration, and tutor education and experience. Lisa Bell is a Senior Fellow of the Higher Education Academy (SFHEA), serves on the board of the International Writing Centers Association and Rocky Mountain Writing Centers Association, and is founding member of the Association for Writing Across the Curriculum.

Christine Blanchard is a Senior Lecturer in Language Sciences. Her research areas include online co-writing, vocabulary learning in multimedia environments, CALL for French as a foreign language and English as a foreign language, open and distance learning.

Julia Bleakney is Director of The Writing Center within the Center for Writing Excellence and an Associate Professor of English at Elon University, where she has been since 2016. She has published in most of the writing center journals and is coeditor of WLN: A Journal of Writing Center Scholarship and series editor of WLN's Digital Edited Collection.

Joshua Botvin is an Assistant Teaching Professor in the English and Communication Program and the Assistant Director of the Writing and Multiliteracy Center at the University of Massachusetts, Dartmouth. He is also a PhD atudent in the Technical Communication and Rhetoric program at Texas Tech University. He instructs first-year courses in Critical Writing & Reading as well as Technical and Business Communication. His research interests focus on the studies of rhetoric, writing centers, generative AI, labor equity, and classroom accessibility.

Sabrina Bramwell is a PhD candidate in the Department of Literature and Writing at Howard University. Her research focuses on the contemporary iterations of marronage within Caribbean literature and culture, with a specific concentration on the intersection between tropes of resistance in Anglocreole traditions and epistemological praxis. Her work examines how dominant and submerged narratives historically frame identity, centering on the roles of orality, oral tradition, and folklore. As a digital humanist, her practice includes metadata curation, spatial audio archiving, and quality control of large-scale audio datasets.

Cassandra Branham is an Associate Professor of Humanities and Communication at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, where she teaches classes in the Communication major, the Honors Program, and general education writing and humanities classes. Her research focuses on digital literacies, and her work as appeared in edited collections such as Reimagining the Humanities and journals such as the International Journal of Students as Partners.

Elisabeth H. Buck is an Associate Professor of English and the Director of the Writing Center at Fordham University in New York City. She is the author of Open-Access, Multimodality, and Writing Center Studies (Palgrave, 2018), which was a finalist for the 2018 IWCA Outstanding Book Award. Her work has appeared in multiple journals and collections across writing studies, and she is the current editor of The Peer Review journal. She enjoys researching and teaching writing center theory and administration, digital and social media, and the rhetoric of popular culture.

Eunhee Buettner is Writing Centre Coordinator and Instructor at the Department of Rhetoric, Writing, and Communications at the University of Winnipeg. She teaches Academic Writing, Narrative Thinking and Writing, Tutoring Writing and other rhetoric and communication courses such as Rhetorics of Identity, Border Rhetoric, and Intercultural Communication. Her research interests include academic literacy for multilingual students, writing centre studies, multimodal literacy including arts-based writing, language and identity, and intercultural communication. In her spare time, she enjoys listening to classical music, playing the piano, walking in nature, and watching Korean dramas.

Joseph Cheatle is an Assistant Professor and Director of the Writing and Communication Center at Oxford College of Emory University, where he teaches courses in composition, rhetoric, literature, and writing center studies. At the time of publication, he is interested in the ways that writing centers are managed, organized, and function. His work has been published in Kairos, Journal of Writing Analytics, Writing Center Journal, Praxis, TPR, and WLN.

Joella Cleary is pursuing a Master of Arts in Literature at University of North Carolina at Greensboro. She previously received her undergraduate degree from Salem College. In addition to Generative AI, ethics, and writing center studies, her research interests include American women's literature, particularly topics concerning women's health and maternity, and contemporary literary theory. She is a wife and mother of three children.

James M. Cochran is Assistant Professor of English in the Department of Literature, Media, and Writing, the 2025–26 Winifred D. Wandersee Scholar-in-Residence, and Director of the Writing Program and Writing Center at Hartwick College. His research interests include pedagogies of memory, first-year writing, religion and literature, and environmental literature. His recent research appears in Praxis, Revenant, Journal of Ecohumanism, Intégrité, Religion and the Arts, Word and Text, the Journal of South Texas English Studies, Open Library of Humanities, and Label Me Latina/o, as well as other edited collections.

Sarah Collins (she/her) serves as the Writing Coordinator in The Learning Hub (learning center) at the University of Illinois Springfield, where she also teaches film and rhetoric through the English department. She earned her MA from the University of Illinois Springfield in English Studies and has over 17 years of tutoring experience. She has written for the encyclopedia Comics Through Time: A History of Icons, Idols, and Ideas; has contributed two chapters to Digitally Mediated Composing and You: A Beginner's Guide to Understanding Rhetoric and Writing in an Interconnected World (2nd ed.) and one chapter to Civic Engagement in the College Classroom: A Guide for Community-Based Writing; and has co-written an article with her team for The Learning Assistance Review that reflected on AI's effect on writing centers. In addition, she has presented workshops and at conferences on generative AI and writing praxis. She belongs to several organizations within learning center and composition studies, including ICLCA, CRLA, and NCTE.

Chloe Crull is a Writing Program Administrator with experience across multiple institutions in California, including Clovis Community College, UC Berkeley, and UC Davis. Her work spans writing program administration and writing center contexts, including tutor education, consultant training, and program coordination. She teaches first-year composition and entry-level writing and has extensive experience with online writing instruction. Her research focuses on collaboration in writing program administration, particularly how Writing Program Administrators build and sustain partnerships across campus and why some collaborations succeed while others falter.

Kevin Dvorak is Executive Director of the Writing and Communication Center at Nova Southeastern University, where he is also a professor and faculty coordinator for first-year experience.

Anna Laura Falvey (she/her/hers) is a Lead Writing Tutor at CUNY City-Tech. She comes to CityTech from Voyages Preparatory High School in Queens, where she was the Teaching Artist in Residence. She has taught courses in everything from English literature to creative writing to the history of arts activism. She has also tutored undergraduate writing at Bard College, where she earned her BA in Classics and Written Arts.

Matthew Fledderjohann earned his PhD in Composition and Rhetoric from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and currently works as the inaugural Director of the Writing Center at Le Moyne College in Syracuse, New York, where he also serves as Director of the Bosch Teaching and Learning Center. He enjoys researching students' interactions with generative AI, teaching classes about death and dying, and studying apocalyptic and post-apocalyptic narratives. Some of his publications have appeared in The Peer Review, Praxis, Enculturation, and The Cormac McCarthy Journal.

Joseph Franklin is an Assistant Professor in the English Department and Director of the City Tech Writing Center at the New York City College of Technology, a CUNY institution located in downtown Brooklyn. His research works at intersections of transnational/translingual theories, writing program administration, and global ethnography.

Helen Lepp Friesen is an Associate Professor in the Department of Rhetoric, Writing, and Communications at University of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada where she teaches Academic Writing, Digital Storytelling, and New Journalism. Her research interests include multimodal composition and research and writing in culturally diverse university classrooms. She also enjoys photography, writing poetry, running, playing tennis, snow and ice sculpting, and spending time with her three beautiful grandchildren.

Kristi Girdharry is Associate Teaching Professor of English and Director of the Writing Center at Babson College in Wellesley, Massachusetts, where she also co-leads The Generator, Babson's interdisciplinary AI lab. She currently teaches courses in writing, tutoring, and social media. Nationally, she reviews for various journals related to writing pedagogy and serves in leadership roles with the Modern Language Association and the Conference on College Composition and Communication. Her recent scholarly work can be found in College Composition and Communication, Literacy in Composition Studies, Business and Professional Communication Quarterly, and Double Helix: A Journal of Critical Thinking and Writing. Her co-authored book, Getting Learning Right: The Promise of Higher Education, grows out of her longstanding work in teaching and higher education (MIT Press, 2026).

Kat Greene has served as the Associate Director for the Writing Center at Ball State University since 2018. She is an Associate Teaching Professor for the Writing Program and the Professional Writing sequence. Her current research interests focus on intersections between writing centers, emerging technologies, and emotional labor and intelligence.

Dacia Dressen-Hammouda's research focuses on interactions between sociocultural context and the communication practices found in specific settings, whether academic, scientific or professional, in English and in French.

Stephanie Hedge (she/her) is an Associate Professor of English and Director of the Writing Program at the University of Illinois Springfield, where she teaches classes on first year writing, digital literacies, and the ways that words do work in the world. She is the editor of Playing Outside the Mainstream: Essays on Indie Tabletop Roleplaying Games (McFarland 2026) and co-editor of Roleplaying Games in the Digital Age: Essays on Transmedia Storytelling, Tabletop RPGs and Fandom (McFarland 2021) with Jennifer Grouling and Digitally Mediated Composing and You (Kendall Hunt, 2nd ed 2024) with Courtney Cox.

Lauren Jablon graduated from Elon University in May 2024 with a dual Bachelor of Arts degree in Professional Writing and Rhetoric and Spanish.

During her time at Elon, she served for three years as a Writing Center Consultant, rising to Lead Consultant in her senior year. Following graduation, Lauren completed a year of service with AmeriCorps as a Refugee Case Manager in Washington, D.C. She now serves as Legislative Consultant to the Honorable Richard Neal (D-MA), representing Massachusetts' First Congressional District.

Lisa Marvel Johnson is an Assistant Teaching Professor at the University of Wisconsin at Madison Writing Center. Her research interests and praxis operate at the intersections of asynchronous learning, antiracism, and assessment.

Sarah Z Johnson is the Writing Center Director and Chair of First Year Composition at Madison College in Madison, Wisconsin. She is a member of national AI Task Forces for the MLA, CCCC, and IWCA, and she recently guest edited a special issue of Teaching English in the Two-Year College focusing on the work and scholarship of two-year college writing centers.

Charlotte Kupsh is an Assistant Professor and Director of the Writing Center at Ball State University, where she teaches in the professional writing program, the writing program, and the rhetoric and composition graduate program. Her research explores how material environments impact professional writers. Her work has appeared in venues such as Writing on the Edge and Reflections, as well as edited collections.

Ellen Cecil-Lemkin is Assistant Teaching Professor in the Writing Center at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She serves as an administrator of the Writing Center specializing in accessibility. Her research investigates topics related to disability, neurodivergence, accessibility, and collaborative writing. Her work can be found in College Composition and Communication, Teaching English at the Two Year College, and several edited collections. Outside of academia, Ellen can be found chasing after her three small (but speedy!) children.

Joni K. Hayward Marcum is the Digital Literacies Coordinator and a faculty member in the University Writing Center at James Madison University, where she also teaches first-year writing in The School of Writing, Rhetoric, and Technical Communication. Her research focuses on digital and AI literacies, technology-mediated writing instruction, and writing center pedagogy, especially how emerging technologies shape teaching and student support. She has published on writing centers and information science, media history, and archival film, and was part of the author team whose article "Peer Tutoring as a High-Impact Practice" (Journal of College Reading and Learning) received the 2025 Outstanding Article Award from the College Reading and Learning Association. She holds a PhD in Media, Cinema, and Digital Studies from the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee and is also an alumna of the University of Colorado (B.A.) and Colorado State University (M.A.).

Rebecca Hallman Martini is Associate Professor of English and Director of the Jill and Marvin Willis Center for Writing. She specializes in writing center studies, writing across the disciplines, and composition pedagogy. Her book, Disrupting the Center: A Partnership-Based Approach to Writing in the University (Utah State University Press, 2022), won the 2024 Conference on College Composition and Communication's Advancement of Knowledge Award. Her research has been published in WPA, Across the Disciplines, Writing Center Journal, Praxis, Computers and Composition, and Research in Online Literacy Education. Currently, she is working on two book projects that center student writer experiences in writing centers: Centering Writers: Student Perspectives on Inclusivity and Access (under advanced contract with Utah State University Press) and On Their Own Terms: Writer-Informed Approaches to Writing Center Praxis (under advanced contract with Bloomsbury University Press).

Eric D. Mason is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Writing and Communication at Nova Southeastern University. His areas of academic interest include, critical theory and pedagogy, visual rhetoric, computers and composition, cultural studies, and service learning. His scholarly work focuses on how the various modalities of composition—textual, visual, aural, and digital—can be brought into the writing classroom and how they intersect with cultural practices. His work has been published in journals such as Enculturation, Media Culture, and The Community Literacy Journal, as well as in books published by Ashgate and SUNY Press. He currently edits Quadrivium: A Journal of Multidisciplinary Scholarship

Amanda M. May is the Writing Center Director and an Assistant Professor of English at New Mexico Highlands University, where she teaches first-year, undergraduate, and graduate courses in writing. Before beginning her position in 2020, she completed her doctoral studies in English at Florida State University. In her twelve years of writing center experience, she has served in numerous tutoring and administrative capacities as an undergraduate student, graduate assistant, and sole writing center employee. Additionally, she taught conversational English abroad in Japan.

Hamza Miftah is a PhD candidate in Linguistics at Université Clermont Auvergne, France. His doctoral research focuses on the mastery of academic writing among Master's students, examining how they enter and navigate university writing activity systems and how generative AI tools mediate their appropriation of writing practices.

Alexandra Omogbadegun (she/her) is a PhD English student at Howard University with a research focus in Afrofuturism and the Digital Humanities. When she's not studying or engaging in research, Alexandra is teaching, baking, performing spoken word poetry, or spending time with family and friends.

Sherry Wynn Perdue directs the Writing Center at Oakland University. Past President of the International Writing Centers Association, she currently serves the organization by co-chairing its GenAI Task Force and co-editing its flagship publication. Her scholarship on dissertation supervision, writing center research, and information literacy has been published in such venues as The Writing Center Journal, The Peer Review, and Praxis. In the small pockets of time she protects for herself, Sherry can be found on the Pilates reformer, hiking with her husband and their Standard Poodle Pike, and building her social media presence through Life, Styled by Sherry.

Emily C. Perkins earned her PhD in Education from the University of Rochester and a Certificate of Advanced Study in Trauma-Informed Practice from Syracuse University. She currently serves as Associate Director of the Writing Center at Le Moyne College, where she teaches both first-year and upper-level writing courses. Her current research interests include academic integrity and the plagiarism paradigm, as well as generative AI in composition studies. Her work has appeared in the Journal of Learning Development in Higher Education and The Peer Review. Outside of her professional work, she is an active member of Pet Partners CNY with her therapy dog, Olive.

Kathryn Pilliod graduated from Hartwick College in 2024 with a Bachelor's of Science degree in nursing. While at Hartwick, she pursued her love of language through a minor in Spanish and her work as a writing consultant. She now lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico, where she works as a cardiac intensive care nurse, rides bikes, rock climbs, and keeps managing to acquire cats and chickens. She must admit she does more reading than writing these days, but is beginning to dream up a novel about the desert and the end of the world.

Ashley Rea is an Assistant Professor of Technical Communication at the University of North Texas. Her research considers the intersections of technology and writing from an intersectional feminist lens. Her work can be found in Technical Communication, Communication Design Quarterly, and Technical Communication Quarterly, among other places.

Alex Rister is an Assistant Professor of Communication and Program Chair for the Bachelor of Science in Communication EmbryRiddle Aeronautical University's Worldwide Campus. She holds M.A. degrees in both Communication and English and a PhD in Texts and Technology from the University of Central Florida. Her research aligns with her professional service and community volunteer work on communication for social change, especially on issues important to girls and women. As a prior University of Central Florida Francis Bok Human Trafficking Awareness Fellow, much of her work focuses on human trafficking awareness. Her research has been published in the Journal of Human Trafficking and Journal of Applied Communication Research among others.

Paula Rosinski is a Professor of Professional Writing & Rhetoric and Director of Writing Across the University in the Center for Writing Excellence at Elon University. In the classroom she teaches courses on multimedia writing, visual rhetoric, and writing technologies. Her current research examines best practices for AI-focused professional development for faculty and staff, AI-augmented writing practices of alumni, and writing center consultant and client attitudes toward AI. Her scholarship has appeared in Composition Forum, Written Communication, Computers and Composition, WPA: Writing Program Administration, the Journal of the Council of Writing Program Administrators, and WLN: A Journal of Writing Center Scholarship, and in edited collections. She is co-leading Elon's initiatives to prepare students, faculty, and staff to use AI ethically and effectively in their teaching, research, and professional lives and also serves on the Executive Committee of the Association of Writing Across the Curriculum (AWAC).

Anna Rymer is a Professional Writing Tutor at High Point University. She is a recent graduate of Salem College, where she was a peer writing center consultant. Her research in GenAI and writing has been presented at the International Writing Centers Association conference. Anna enjoys working with students and hopes to continue empowering the next wave of leaders through their writing.

Carly Schnitzler teaches writing at Johns Hopkins University in the University Writing Program. Her research and teaching center digital rhetoric, creative computation, and the public humanities. For the past three years, she has served as co-editor of TextGenEd: Teaching with Text Generation Technologies (WAC Clearinghouse, 2023) and TextGenEd: Continuing Experiments (2024, 2025), open-access pedagogical collections showcasing early experiments in thoughtfully teaching writing with generative text technology, including but not limited to AI. She is also the founder of If, Then: Technology and Poetics, a community of artists, scholars and teachers invested in inclusivity and skills-building in creative computation

Jean Schwab is the Director of Peer Assisted Learning at Furman University, where she oversees the subject-based group tutoring program and the Writing & Media Lab. Her academic interests include metacognitive reflection, tutor training, and multimodal composition in writing centers. She also teaches a class on the history and practice of knitting in Furman's three-week May Experience program.

Madilynne Smith is a recent alum of Hartwick College. She studied history and Spanish and worked as a Writing Center Consultant and a Peer Tutor. She plans to get her master's in education and work as a Spanish teacher in the near future.

Nicholas Stillman is a PhD Candidate in English Literature at the University of California, Davis, where he also works as a Graduate Student Researcher for the UC Davis Writing Center. His research examines the material and cultural history of writing machines—from the typewriter to large language models—and their influence on writing pedagogy and theories of authorship. His work appears in Computers and Composition and is forthcoming in Critical AI.

Meghan Velez is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Writing and Rhetoric at the University of Central Florida, where she teaches courses in professional writing, AI literacies, and rhetorics of data. Previously, she was Co-Director of the Virtual Environment for Communication: Teaching, Outreach, and Research (VECTOR) at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University, Worldwide Campus. Her research can be found in the Journal of Business and Technical Communication, Across the Disciplines, Communication Teacher, and Thresholds in Education. Her research interests include digital rhetorics, histories of communication technologies, and online writing instruction.

Deirdre Vinyard is the Director of the Writing Center at Johns Hopkins University and has taught English and writing in the US, Canada, and Japan. She has published in the Journal of Language, Identity, and Education and the collection Linguistic Justice on Campus. Her teaching and research interests center on multilingual students in writing classrooms and multilingual tutors in the writing center.

Cara Violini is a writing specialist in Athabasca University's writing centre in Canada. She recently completed her doctoral degree which focused on inclusive writing centre pedagogies that better support students with disabilities. She also holds undergraduate degrees in education and English literature, a Master of Arts in literary studies and an MFA in creative writing. Prior to her work in the Write Site, she taught composition, creative writing, and English at the secondary and post-secondary levels. She lives in Calgary, Canada with her family.

Paola Yuli is a PhD candidate and an English Instructor in the Department of Literature and Writing at Howard University. Her research focuses on bodies of water and hydro-crisis in Caribbean literature, Black studies, the blue humanities, the climate humanities, feminist studies, and postcolonial studies. Paola is currently a 2026 Inductee in the Edward A. Bouchet Graduate Honor Society (BGHS), which celebrates scholarly achievements and inclusive excellence at the doctoral level and in the professoriate. In 2024, she was a recipient of the Ernest E. Just-Percy L. Julian Graduate Research Fellowship from Howard. From 2021-2024, Paola was a Howard University Writing Center Coach, supporting undergraduate and graduate students in their academic writing journeys. From 2023-2024, she served as the Graduate English Student Association (GESA) Vice President at Howard and as a student advisor for The Smithsonian American Art Museum (SAAM) exhibit, The Shape of Power: Stories of Race and American Sculpture. Paola received her BA in English with a minor in Environmental Science from Barnard College in 2017.